Fr Chris' Sermon – The Epiphany of the Lord

The wise men got me into big trouble this year! At the Nativity celebration, during our version of the Game Show the 'Chase', one of the questions was: 'how many wise men were there?' The answer to which, according to the bible, is: "We don't know". Well, after Mass on Christmas morning, Beth took to me to task, and asked why I didn't know that there were three wise men. I argued (I can't help feeling in vain!) that the number of Magi is not actually mentioned, but of course legend has it that there were three, as evidenced in our nativity scene, on cards, in certain Carols, and in the names: Casper, Melchior and Balthazar. And Matthew details the three specific gifts of Gold, Frankincense and myrrh. I decided not to wind things up further with Beth by asking how the wise men travelled, the answer to which is also "we don't know", although camel is probably quite an educated guess, all we really know is that the Magi came during the reign of King Herod and they came from the East to Jerusalem. And they came to a house. as is reflected in our nativity scene

It's widely thought among scholars that the visitors were from the Parthian Empire, which was centred around present day Iran and Iraq, and that the Magi were Zoroastrian priest-astrologers from Persia.

In our first reading and our psalm there are some forward looking references to the Epiphany. In Isaiah we heard: "The nations come to your light and kings to your dawning brightness." And, with a prophetic nod to the mode of transport, "camels in throngs will cover you, and dromedaries of Midian and Ephah; everyone in Sheba will come, bringing gold and incense and singing the praise of the Lord." And in the psalm "The kings of Sheba and Seba shall bring him gifts. Before him all kings shall fall prostrate, all nations shall serve him."

Over the centuries a combination of scholarly research, biblical exegesis and handed down tradition has created the story which we enjoy and celebrate today. What we have come to accept as part of the whole Christmas story is, a lot of it, based on conjecture. But this really doesn't matter, as long as we do not lose site of the central truths and reality. Because the importance lies not in the historicity and the human details of the event, but in the theology and what God's message is in all this, and what it means to us today.

Like so much of Scripture, what is written in this individual episode speaks at different levels and defies time. On the one hand the wise men did undertake a physical journey across a thousand or so miles, but they also underwent a spiritual journey and a transformation.

Matthew uses the Magi to highlight the essential truth, and fulfilment of the prophecies, that God's love and redemption was to apply to all people's, not just the people of Israel. The epiphany story can also relate directly to us and our own individual Christian journeys, not least in what we will encounter along the way. I can't help but feel that the Magi, when they reached the house, must have thought "surely this can't be the right place!". There's no way that what they saw would have met the expectations they had. They had travelled for weeks even months (some say 2 years) to bring precious gifts to a King, the King of the Jews. Surely, they would have been expecting to arrive at a Palace, with all the attendant trappings of royalty. Instead, after visiting Herod's palace (a place far more likely to be the birthplace of an earthly King) they end up at a house and see a child with his humble mother. And what do the wise men do? They don't turn around and say: "sorry we must have come to the wrong place". They fall to their knees in homage; full of awe!

And then they present their precious and regal gifts of Gold, Frankincense and Myrrh. They have followed the star, the light, their sign, and against all reasonable human logic, and despite what their eyes and expectations must have been telling them, they recognise Jesus, for who and what he is. They worship him, and they give to him.

They were called by God, they follow His call, they worship Him and they give to him.

And that simple formula should apply equally to each one of us. We're called, we follow, we worship, we give. The way in which Jesus calls each one of us may be very different and may be completely unexpected to us, and here we should learn from the Magi – just because it is not what we expected, does not mean it's not real.

There is no set pattern to how God calls people; in the same way that there is no template for a perfect Christian. We can sometimes make the mistake of trying to mould ourselves into what we see as a good Christian, by looking at those around us, rather than looking directly to Jesus himself, and what he is asking us to do.

And there are a couple of other parallels between our own journeys and that of the magi. The wise men keep their eyes fixed on the star to guide them. It is unrealistic to think that their long journey was without unplanned incident or problems, but they kept going. In the same way we must keep our eyes focused on the light of Christ, despite what life will inevitably throw at us along the way. Secondly, although we don't know for sure how many wisemen there were, we do know that they were not on their own – wisemen, not wiseman!

They had company on their journey. And, being members of Christ's church, we also do not travel alone. We each have a personal relationship with Jesus, but we also journey with other people at our side to encourage and support us. And we should offer and support too. When the Magi found Jesus they gave him Gold, Frankincense and Myrrh, each with its own distinct symbolism. We all have different gifts to give (each we have received from him in the first place), but one common gift we have, is our hearts and ourselves. As Christina Rossetti wrote in her poem "In the Bleak Mid-Winter"

*What can I give Him, Poor as I am?
If I were a shepherd I would bring a lamb;
If I were a wise man I would do my part;
Yet what I can, I give Him - Give my heart.*

To truly give Jesus our hearts, is to commit to love him and to love everyone around us too. And from that will come wonderful transformation and the kind of delight experienced by the Wisemen – however many of them there were!
